CHES

by Julia Donaldson

Said the King with his eye on the enemy's shore,
"I'll declare war."

Said the Queen who possessed a superior brain,
"I'll plan the campaign."

Said the wide-moated Castle with walls all around,
"I'm safe and sound."

Said the Bishop, "We'll lose every battle unless
I pray for success."

Said the Knight on his charger, "I'll carry the day
Or gallop away."

Said the pawn who was born to be a soldier and slave,
"I'll go to my grave."

The Malfesance

Alan Bold

The Malfesance
by Alan Bold

It was a dark, dark, dreadful night,
And while millions were asleep,
The Malfesance bestirred itself,
And raised its ugly head.

The leaves dropped quietly in the night,
In the dry Chan glens;
The Malfesance bestirred itself,
Then crawled around all down.

Taller than a chimney stack,
More massive than a church,
It gathered to the city,
With a purpose and a lurch.

Squeech, squeech, the sooty feet,
Flapped along the roads,
Hopping like it had been seen,
Since the recent fall of the toads.

Bullets bounced off the beast,
Aircraft made it grin,
Its open mouth made an eerie sound,
Lugger than sin.
